The idea of not wearing a helmet while riding a motorcycle is one of those things that really makes me scratch my head, which I'm thankful to still have. I don't know if there's an argument you could present in favor of convincing me to not wear a helmet while riding. Now I will say that I am not innocent, in my younger years I rode a lot without a helmet until I saw what happens when you don't. Some may argue that personal liberty and the right for an individual to run their own life, as long as it does no direct harm to others, can be read in our founding documents. While this may be a good point, it falls onto the "just because you can, doesn't mean you should" category for me personally. Like, you can eat a Carolina ghost pepper or stick your head in an alligator's mouth-go ahead, the internet will thank you. But why would you? I don't need a scientist to tell me who wins when your naked head hits a wall or the pavement at 60 mph. By the same token though I am a firm believer in live and let live-so, touché! Be safe, be smart and may God Bless!
